MORE POWER THAN

PREHISTORIA

PRIMITIVE WEAPONS

The earliest records of Mankind's history are found at ancient camp and hunting sites. Here our prehistoric ancestors left evidence of their savage everyday lives. Animal remains found in East Africa show that early Man hunted giant wild sheep, boars and antelope. To the north, in what is now Europe, primitive man hunted the mastodon by trapping the prehistoric elephant in deep pits and stoning him to death. Our ancestors also hunted the cave bear, driving him out of his lair with flaming torches and finishing him off with rocks hurled from above. Herds of wild horses were surrounded and driven over cliffs.

Bones were probably Man's first tools and weapons. Antelope thigh bones were used to club baboons. Split by fire, these bones became sharply pointed daggers.

Prehistoric "digs" show that Man moved up into his next stages of development by developing tools and weapons made of stone. These were crude, hand-held rocks with chipped edges. They were used as axes, scrapers and awls.
